

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1400 on Sunday 10 Jan 2021

UK Outlook for Friday 15 Jan 2021 to Sunday 24 Jan 2021:

A dry day for most on Friday before outbreaks of rain spread from the northwest later in the day. Over the weekend and into the following week rather unsettled conditions will develop across the UK. This will bring spells of rain to many areas, these perhaps accompanied by strong winds at times. The heaviest and most prolonged periods of rainfall are likely to affect the south and west, with the best of any drier conditions more likely in the north and east. Some snow is also likely at times in the north, especially over high ground. Temperatures are uncertain during this period although current indications are for temperatures to be below normal for the time of year.
